[Radiation therapy with the intracavitary high dose rate source (HDR-source) for malignant diseases in the head and neck]. The intracavitary high dose rate (HDR) source was used in 100 courses of radiation therapy of malignant diseases (107 patients) located in the head and neck. 4 patients were treated for recurrence after surgery and the other 96 patients received radiotherapy after curative or palliative surgery. The source was inserted in the second cervical cyst or the naso-pharyngeal cyst. The dose of HDR-source ranged from 90 to 690 CGE. In most cases, 94 patients were treated with this system. The most frequent local lesions were recurrent tumors or the residual tumor after surgery in 40 cases, 33 patients were treated for primary disease or for recurrence after the surgery. Radiation therapy with the HDR-source showed effective results in 41 (97.6%) of 42 cases after the one course of treatment and in 53 (94.6%) of 56 cases after two courses of treatment. The skin of mouth was very sensitive to the source due to its proximity with the treatment area. Side effects were not so severe compared with those of the conventional radiotherapy with LINAC. The intracavitary HDR-source is a useful technique for radiation therapy of the head and neck diseases. Heat stress and inflammation in workers exposed to crystalline silica: an inverse relation? The relation between heat stress (HS) and inflammation in workers is not well characterized, although it has been suggested that, in the case of a prolonged exposure, HS can contribute to inflammation and could be a target for such interventions. The objective of this study was to quantify the association between HS and inflammation. Airway and systemic inflammation were evaluated by measuring the serum levels of C-reactive protein (CRP) and interleukin-6 (IL-6). Two hundred and forty-seven workers, exposed to crystalline silica, were selected from non-airway, non-cardiovascular, non-respiratory disease control groups. Measurements of CRP and IL-6 were taken into account occupational activity, cumulative silica exposure, and heat stress. Working days in which the heat index exceeded 35 degrees C for 90 min (during 30 min of the heat exposure) were evaluated. Workers exposed to crystalline silica had significantly higher concentrations of CRP (median = 0.61 mg/dl) and IL-6 (median

What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2020?

The Space Shuttle is STILL in retirement. I'm sure there will be many who will be satisfied if it is retired, but not me. I can't think of a more exciting design from that era. It is more or less a 40's looking rocket from the 30's. Also, of all the previous designs and intentions the guys at NASA decided to put their best man on the job at the beginning of the Space Age. While the other designs in the past would have had to wait a while to get there chance and had to do it cheaper and in a way to be environmentally sound they had a tremendous amount of already in place which allowed them to start on the next design the second one came out the first. With that in mind we have had over two generations of ships in a design that easily should have been scrapped and done with as most of it was really never built and not needed nor used. With a lot of people dying off of old people I guess the parents/Grandparents decided that it was time to retire the ship. >There is not much use for this now, and it is in the way at >the stables in a lot of ways. It isn't flying, >it isn't fast, it isn't a single use vehicle, and>the technology can be built into some other design. > This stinks to high heaven. I thought so too. But then I tried to rationalize it, saying that we must know what the most logical design should be for the next ship. But that is what really lies in the genes of the old aviators. All of them would agree on one thing, the first thing they learned was "high glide" which was basically about how to glider as soon as they learned to fly. After that it was hit and move until something went wrong. So all the designers went and built things for this idea. We can't wait to see how we build the next ship, but we haven't even tried yet. If we are not careful we will live on a spaceship made of meat. If you haven't seen a flight where the ship really went around the earth, it makes you think how damn lucky we are to be living now. As it should be for a species that has an alter ego. What is wrong with us that we have to dress this way? Or do you remember being in the passenger compartment, looking at the earth below and all around you, feeling the real vibrations of what it would be
