I found a solution to save the code to a new file, but it takes a long time (a lot of memory) and sometimes it crashes (probably after the rendering process). Any suggestions on how to solve this? A: I resolved the issue by using `pdfjam -t %i -o %o.pdf`. Also, I'm using python 3.6 I have the same problem, I tried almost all the methods, and it seems like the best solution is to directly export as PDF. I use it with RStudio to generate the document. `ui.actionSaveAsPDF(type="application/pdf")`. Then, if you are using Windows, you need to specify the output directory where to save. `ui.actionSaveAsPDF(type="application/pdf", output="C:\\Users\\user\\Desktop\\file.pdf")`. The Pavoco Dusty Rose® Fabricator table tennis table is a 100% water table, which is environmentally friendly and has extremely reliable performance. The table tennis table is built to withstand the rigors of professional usage in the field, with a greater strength to weight ratio than most similar products. The Pavoco Dusty Rose® Table Tennis Table is a Class-4, UL and CSA listed product for home use. There is a travel bag, fabric protector, and hanger included. For larger volume orders, please contact us for larger travel bags. We also provide a special acrylic protector to cover the surface of the table for a custom finish that is beautiful and resistant to scratches. Q: How to build a docker image with python package For the purpose of testing with docker I'd like to have some sort of buildpack for python, as docker does not support custom Python versions natively. For example, if I want to use Python 3.6.8 (latest docker version) in my image, I could use: `FROM python:3.6.8` I'd like to know if there are any public Dockerfiles for such use cases? Or can I create my own by simply calling something like `python -m pip install` from my image? You can create a Dockerfile for your needs, but it won't work properly. The problem is that the Python modules you want to install are usually Python 82157476af
